How the Virtual World is Shaping the Real World

How are new technologies affecting the world around us? Who is driving these changes and how are we making sure it is a force for good?

- Shopping with no tills
- Concerts with no artists
- Therapy with no therapists
- Immersive experiences through materials

A panel of innovators discuss how technology is influencing our everyday lives and share their thoughts on what we can expect in the future:

Ian Comley, VFX Supervisor at Industrial Light and Magic, the visual effects production company blending real and virtual worlds to captivate audiences in films and music performances.

Dr Kate Stone, Founder and Chief Technology Officer of Novalia, a company which blends digital with the physical to create unique interactive experiences.

Charles King, COO Rovr Systems which develops, a safe and intuitive means of navigation and movement in virtual reality and now focusses on healthcare and wellbeing applications.

Chaired by Jane Barrett, Global Editor, Media News Strategy for Reuters . As part of the Editorial leadership team, she has responsibility for new business across the 171-year-old news agency, from growing output and revenue in audio and fact-checking to modernising journalistic formats and content.

Join us back in Stationers' Hall after two years' away for a lively discussion and networking over drinks and a light buffet supper.
